Biography

Mary Edith (Edie) Powell was born in Tuskegee, Alabama. Her family had close ties with Tuskegee University. Her father, C.B. Powell, who worked at Johnson’s Drug Store, made frequent trips to Dr. George Washington Carver’s laboratory in order to acquire peanut oil which was subsequently bottled, labeled, and sold for Dr. Carver.

At the age of 4 or 5, Powell became infected with Polio and her family sought treatment at the Infantile Paralysis Center at Tuskegee Institute. Under the watch care of close family friend Dr. Chenault, Powell was confirmed as having polio and sent to Warm Springs, Georgia for further consultation. She was required to wear a “short-leg brace” until shortly before she began first grade.

Powell received her undergraduate, graduate and doctorate from Auburn University. Although she worked at a variety of hospitals, she worked as an instructor at Tuskegee University in the School of Nursing and Allied Health from 1986 until her retirement in 2008. Due to her previous condition as a polio survivor and her teaching at Tuskegee University, she became interested in researching the subject of polio. It is during her tenure at Tuskegee University, Powell worked with Dr. John Fl Hume, M.D. on research regarding the Infantile Paralysis Center.
