Processing Information

Due to previous use by researchers, files and boxes were left in their original order. Due to the some of the folders having too many documents, papers were separated into successive folders. Likewise, some boxes were over-full, requiring other boxes to be added in succession. If a box was too full and another box was added, the successive box retained the same box number, but with a suffix of a, b or c added, depending on the need.

In processing the collection, original folders were replaced with acid-free folders.

Folders were labeled, either following the original labeling (including labeling added after the collection was created), or in the case of missing or incorrect labels were assigned folder titles. All metal fasteners were removed.

Biography

From a modest beginning in a one room shanty located near Butler's Chapel AME Zion Church, Tuskegee University rose to national prominence under the leadership of its first president, Booker T. Washington (1856-1915). Washington was a highly skilled organizer and fund-raiser who counseled U.S. presidents and was a strong advocate of African American farmers and businesses. He worked tirelessly in developing methods to aid African Americans to succeed by establishing a variety of on-campus vocational classes including carpentry, brick-making, sewing, millinery, animal husbandry and gardening. Students were also required to complete coursework toward general diplomas which included mathematics, English and history. Student enrollment was not limited to rural Macon County and the South, but was international in composition.

Washington's vision for Tuskegee University (originally called Tuskegee Normal and changed to Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute in 1893) involved recruiting the best and brightest available within the African American community including George Washington Carver (1860-1943) as Farm Manager (1896), architect Robert R. Taylor (1868-1942) as Director of Mechanical Industries (1882), and Monroe N. Work (1866-1945) as founder of the Department of Records and Research (1908). Carver's experimentation with a variety of plants exemplified Tuskegee's focus on research and development. Taylor designed and oversaw the construction, using local resources and student labor, of many of the University's historic buildings including the University Chapel (1896) which was renowned for its "singing windows (1932).” Work’s publication of the Negro Year Book (1912-51) and the Bibliography of the Negro in Africa and America (1928) illustrated the University’s mission to publish scholarly information that would be useful to Americans in all walks of life. Furthermore, Washington developed a variety of techniques to teach, both on campus and off, by using the Jessup Agricultural Wagon (1906), an agricultural school on wheels, and The Southern Letter (1884)(later to become The Rural Messenger, (1922)) in order to educate farmers. Washington served as president until his death on November 14, 1915.

Scope and Contents

The papers of Booker T. Washington: The Tuskegee Collection consist of documents spanning from 1887-1995, and include letters and data, personal and business correspondence, ephemera, objects and speeches during his tenure at the Tuskegee Institute. Most of the folders labeled simply with a date are correspondence and documents relative to that date.

Arrangement

The papers are arranged into one series.
