Charles Alfred Anderson Trainer of black pilots, 89

Charles Alfred Anderson, 89, who taught himself to fly and then trained the Tuskegee Airmen, America's first black military pilots, died Saturday in Alabama.

Mr. Anderson was considered the father of black aviation. He ran Tuskegee University's pilot training program, an experiment begun before World War II to disprove a belief among some that blacks could not learn to fly airplanes.

Mr. Anderson, affectionately known as "Chief," said he learned to fly by reading books and getting tips from young white pilots. He scraped together enough money to buy an airplane and got his pilot's license in 1929. He trained the first black pilots for the Army Air Corps.
